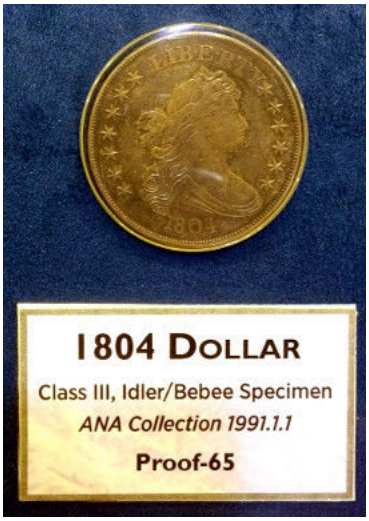
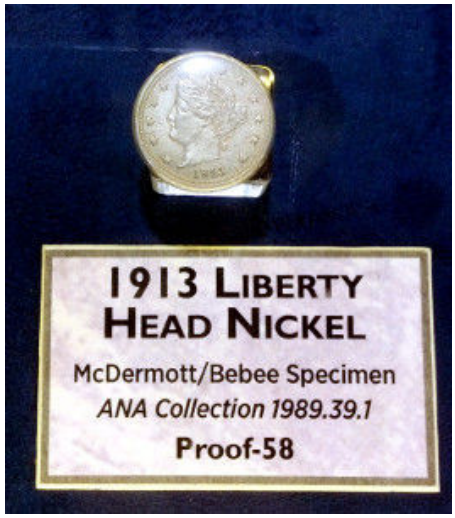
We talked with US Mint's lawyer who won the case against the Switt family for the 1933 double eagles. He said that the statute of limitation had expired. Then he used the analogy if someone stole your car you still own the title of ownership to it. If they came back and asked, "Does this car match the car you used to own?" Then the original owner still claim the car, because the title does not expire. They said that a mint employee illegally stole the coins and sold it to the Mr. Switt.

I think the world mints (i.e. Canada) had better displays and presentation than the US Mint.





The ANA displayed their 1804 Dollar and 1913 Liberty Nickel
